Identifying Latent Patient Safety Threats Using In-situ Simulation with Multi-disciplinary Teams at Starship Hospital, New Zealand

Trish Wood, Gabrielle Nuthall, Denish Kumar, Anna Marie Grace, Sarah Jamison, Mike Shepherd

Corresponding author: Trish Wood

Categories: Pediatrics, Medical Simulation
Keywords: in situ simulation, patient safety

How to cite this poster

Abstract

In-situ multi-disciplinary team (MDT) training using simulation is used to identify latent safety threats in the clinical environment. Latent safety threats are errors in design of environment, organisational systems and team interactions that are found to have potential impact on the delivery of healthcare and patient safety.